One boat, one dream

Young sailor Laura Dekker talks about her love of the sport

My mother is from Germany and my father is from the Netherlands, but I was actually born in New Zealand. They were on a sailing trip at the time. When the trip ended, they decided to return to my dad's home country. That's where we lived when I was a child.

Every day after school, instead of playing with other kids, I preferred to spend time sailing with Dad. He taught me everything I know about boats. I was only six when I went out on a boat alone for the first time.

On my eighth birthday, Dad gave me a book by an American woman called Tania Aebi. She sailed around the world alone when she was 18. I thought her story was really interesting and I told Dad that I wanted to do the same.

When I was 14, I knew that I was ready for my own trip. My father was happy for me to go.

The TV and newspapers were interested because I was the youngest person to do this, but that wasn't important for me. I just wanted to sail my boat and do something new and exciting.

My round-the-world trip took me 17 months. I enjoyed arriving in different countries and meeting people there. But what I loved most was feeling close to the sea and sky and seeing some amazing animals. It was a fantastic journey.
